Santia and Ghaneshwaran Muthusamy's marriage was made in heaven; it was an emblematic arranged marriage. They were introduced by their parents. Santia first met Ghanesh on May last year when he was back from US for a break. They kept in touch by the use of Skype and phone.

After few months of knowing one another quite well, the pair came to a decision to take the next stride forward – marriage. Their courtship went on for a year long before the wedding bells hit off.

When describing her groom, Santia says, "His appealing smile just softens my heart away. Besides that, he is a loving person who seems to accommodate all my entails, and he loves surprising me with what I like. Indeed, he is a jovial person, who can easily splinter jokes that makes me to laugh my heart out."

"She is very accommodating and tolerant. She personifies patience that I could only dream of being one. Moreover, her strong cultural essence attracted me about her," said Ghanesh when asked about Santia.

Their one year long courtship was consisting of 95% long distance which eventually led to thousands of hours on the phone and 5% face to face during Ghaneshwaran's two trips back to Malaysia. He even added that when two souls click, the chemistry flows and method of communication becomes secondary.

Santia resigned from her job a month before the wedding. The bride had to toil on her wedding arrangements. Luckily, her parents, brother, Ghanesh and cousins were helpful in many ways and shook off the last minute pressure away from her shoulder. The newlyweds frequently kept in touch via Skype during the wedding preparations.

Flower arrangements at the Sri Sakthi Easwary Temple were done by Symphony Fun, who played with different colours of roses and Chili Red Gebras to tie up with the wedding theme – cream and maroon. Emmaline and Jared from Doodle Studio covered the videography for the wedding.

"Symphony Fun team was so supportive in planning the wedding decorations and etc. We didn't have to worry about the décor as it was well taken care."

The newlywed couple was very happy with the turnout for the wedding regardless of the scarce timing of the wedding that was held in the morning. Everything during the nuptial ceremony went smoothly without any glitches.
